

Last weekend, we were surrounded by news about Singles' Day. However, shopping spree made us ignore many tragedies in the world. Last week, California was not peaceful at all.

Last Thursday, a devastated mother told the media, "I want gun control. No more guns.". Her son, survived a shooting in Las Vegas last year that left 58 dead, but died at the hands of a gunman.

The latest incident, which came when the gunman stormed into a Bar and fatally shot 12 people before killing himself. In fact, a gunman opened fire and killed 11 people just two weeks earlier. A nonprofit organization - Gun Violence Archive has marked the incident as the 307th mass shooting in the US in this year, and more than 1,500 people killed or injured. The organization also showed that an average of one mass shooting has occurred every day in the US. And ridiculously, where the incident happened consistently rated by the FBI as one of the safest cities in the United States.

People have different options for this problem. Someone like the mother is eager to control guns. But the others think they need guns, if everyone in the Bar had a gun, they could end the threat right away and catch the criminal.

Then, I need to mention a news story related to guns in China. Last week, a father argued with his son when having lunch, and shot his son in the end. It's amazing that a father will kill his son. Besides police found 5 guns in their home.

All people who live in China think we need to control guns strictly to prevent tragedies like that. Most of Chinese do not have guns, so we pay more attention to the disadvantages of guns and strongly support the policy. However, it is difficult for the US government to persuade people to give up their right to have guns.

It's a systematic problem in the US, but the government must take measures to ensure the safety of citizens. Everywhere should be safe enough. And I am lucky to live in China.
